

3Q 2019 MARKET REVIEW

Slowing Growth Pressures Rates and Limits Stock Market Returns

The third quarter's 0.48% total return put the Russell Midcap® Index up 21.93% for the year; the Russell Top 200® Index returned 1.78% for the quarter and is up 20.01% year-to-date, while the Russell 2000® Index declined 2.40% in the third quarter and is up 14.18% for the year. U.S. markets and the dollar continue to outperform relevant international alternatives as investors try to reconcile slowing global growth and an industrial/manufacturing recession with increasingly dovish global monetary policy and resilient job creation/consumer spending in the U.S.

Indeed, in September we saw a very powerful rotation out of growth and momentum and into value factors, including some inexpensive cyclical stocks. This contrasts greatly with the growth-led market that we've experienced the last two years, which has largely been driven by negative earners and/or very high valuation stocks.

Our philosophy is built on the premise that we can construct a portfolio of high-quality, reasonably priced stocks that also offer good growth, and that over any reasonable time frame this type of portfolio will outperform the market. The last couple years have been unique in that the market is seemingly saying the opposite; i.e., that high valuation names are underpriced and/or that high valuation is a good predictor of future returns, a belief we think is in direct contradiction to the 30+ years of stock market history we have experienced. Our philosophy to minimize valuation risk has served us well over time, and we believe it will continue to be prudent over the long term. We remain confident that a stock's price ultimately reverts to intrinsic value, which is determined not only by growth but also by profitability and risk, and when it does our valuation discipline and quality bias will ultimately pay off.

ATTRIBUTION

Strong Selection in Health Care Offset by Allocation/Style Headwinds and Challenges in Technology/Industrials

The Munder Mid-Capitalization Growth Strategy generated a -1.19% total return (Gross) for the quarter, with gains in Real Estate, Materials, Health Care, and Communication Services offset by declines in Consumer Staples, Energy, Industrials, Technology, Financials, and Consumer Discretionary. The Strategy generated outsized positive stock selection within the Health Care sector, as well as modest excess returns within Materials, Communication Services, and Energy, against the Russell Midcap® Growth Index. Still, this was offset by headwinds from sector allocation and style factors (e.g., underweight Consumer Staples, higher exposure to growth and momentum), as well as stock selection challenges in Industrials and Technology. Importantly, we believe the strong rotation in September out of growth and momentum and into value—and, more importantly for the Strategy, out of hyper-growth/high-valuation stocks—represents a leadership change in the market that is generally positive for our "growth at a reasonable price" philosophy.

Stock Selection Strong in Health Care

Health Care was the second worst performing sector behind Energy in the index, with the sector impacted by both the rotation away from high-growth/high-valuation names as well as ongoing regulatory concerns heading into the 2020 election (e.g., Medicare for all, greater drug pricing controls). The majority of the Strategy's holdings outperformed this quarter, led by top contributor Edwards Lifesciences, a medical device company with products that address heart valve disease, cardiac surgery, and critical care. The company reported a strong beat-and-raise quarter, with broad-based strength across geographies driven by strength in its transcatheter aortic valve replacement (TAVR) product. Recent favorable data for TAVR is driving growth, and we believe this momentum can continue with new FDA approval for low surgical risk patients and the introduction of new products.

Industrials/Technology Disappoint

The Industrial sector was up low-single-digits in the index, with strength in services, road & rail, and aerospace & defense (A&D) offset by weakness in airlines and capital goods (ex-A&D). For the Strategy, selection was challenged within capital goods, including two of our defense positions, Kratos Defense & Security Solutions and HEICO Corporation, which had been really strong performers to date, and whose strong growth profiles and higher valuations made them vulnerable during the September market rotation. Kratos, a national security technology provider with proprietary expertise in the area of unmanned aerial vehicles, electronics for missile defense systems, electronic warfare systems, and satellite control and management systems, also saw weakness after lowering second-half guidance due to the delay of several large deals. Importantly, bookings remained solid for the quarter at 1.1x book-to-bill, and the company's strong backlog and pipeline support accelerating growth into 2020, leaving our multi-year, multi-program, strong long-term growth thesis intact. Specifically, Kratos' unmanned product set is a major point of emphasis for the U.S. Department of Defense, and the company is dominant in its part of the market, with several new growth programs supporting 20%+ growth for the next several years.

The Technology sector was down less than 1% in the index this quarter, with outsized strength in semiconductor capital equipment as well as good performance in distributors and data processing/outsourcing, offset by declines in internet, consulting, and software. For the Strategy, negative stock selection was in large part due to our lack of exposure to semi-cap equipment, which was up nearly 25% this quarter despite the cyclical nature of the industry. Outside of this, stock selection was balanced, with contributions from our strong performers (Fiserv, CDW) offset by a few disappointments (PTC Inc., SS&C).

The Munder Mid-Capitalization Growth Strategy's focus is to invest in mid-cap stocks that we believe have superior growth prospects and reasonable valuations. We are confident that this combination of fundamental strength and attractive valuation positions the Strategy for strong competitive performance. These characteristics have historically contributed to the Strategy's successful long-term record, and we are confident they will continue to serve our investors well.
